5. Citations

Intertextual citations, links and footnotes are used in accordance with the MLA's international standards (Modern Language Association). Citations are enclosed in square brackets, as shown below:

- The author's surname and the link page (page range) is written, if the link is made from a monograph or an article by one author. [Stepanyan 185]

  When there are two authors, the surnames of the authors are followed by the link page (page range), for example[Гроф, Хелифакс 40-41].

  When there are three or more authors, the first author's surname is indicated by adding "et al.", followed by the link page, as in [Smith et al. 13]

  If the article references several works by the same author, the link (Italic) also includes the work's short title, such as [Clausewitz, On War 22].

  Except for the link page, intertextual links to electronic sources contained in web pages are implemented in the manner described above, if the author(s) is/are/mentioned there (the page of the web page is not mentioned).

- If there is no separate author for the source, the short title and page (page range) of the link are written. These are primarily collective research and analytical materials whose creation is overseen by an institution. Except for bookmarks (the page of the web page is not mentioned), contextual links to similar materials from web pages are implemented in the same way, for example, [Higher Education of Armenia], [Constitution of the Republic of Armenia]. Further to that, in this case, the title of the in-text link should be shortened so that it is clear from the link which specific source from the list of literature is being referred to.

- If the article's source is a video, the last name of the author speaking in the linked video or the video's short title is indicated, followed by the time range of the given link, for example[Brzezinski 4: 00-5: 09].

6. Tables, charts, maps and etc. (hereinafter referred to as "images") are placed in the text, followed by a glimpse to the main body, where the brackets provide a reference to the image, for example: (See "Figure №").

The name and number of the images are written above them (bold), italic, orientation: right), and the brief descriptions, explanations immediately after (italic, orientation: center).

Formulas are typed using the Equation or MathType programs in the center of the line. The ordinal number of the formula is put at the end of the same line in parentheses. Character sizes are set to Default (Full Size = 12) format,

7. Direct citations are enclosed in quotation marks "". References must be used after direct citations.

8. The article's pages are all numbered, the page number is at the bottom of the page, and the orientation is center.

9. Articles that have previously been published or submitted to other publishers will not be considered for publication.

10. When submitting the article, the author writes on the last page: "The article is submitted for the first time", followed by the submission date, signature(s) of the author(s), and telephone number(s).
